LA PETITE COWARD; OR, JEANNE WAS LOST AND FOUND.

"How does it is this night," said Louise, despairingly, as she threw open the window and looked down into the shadowy street, "I know it is not this night." And the poor Auguste, he will be killed! I feel it! O mon pauvre Auguste!"

There was something the matter with Louise tonight. She had taken off the pretty white cap that would have told you she was Marie Jeanne's femme, as she leaned out of the window she pounded both her strong hands in the folds of her coarse black skirt, and choked at with a tear in her throat. Perhaps she danced she heard a sob in the throat, or Louise was a strange young Roya Dean and would have asked no better amusement than a dance or dance equal with some of the fleetest race.

But she was not the only being in the great city whose veins ran just now with the blood of revolution. Paris was astir to night, and Paris was seized with a terrible excitement. Every now and then the dark street was lighted up by a gleaming torch, and every now and then the tramp of houses answering to the cry, "A bas les Jésuites! Vive la République!" Later order and better grew the hoarse murmur in the distance, and ever nearer and nearer came the feet of the great, wild crowd hurrying on with death in its heart, toward the beautiful Place.

But amid the wicked unrest of the rude world without seemed only to make more the sweet peace of little Marie Jeanne. She lay in her tiny bed with the dim rays of the night lamp streaming in her golden curls into a halo about her pretty baby face. Her hands were folded on her breast, or she had raised them over her prayers. Only four years old and left alone in the great storm!

Her father and mother were in England, whither they had gone but yesterday with a holiday for, leaving their little daughter in what they thought the most faithful hands of Louise. But the city had gone mad in an hour, and Louise with it. Who was now to stand between Marie Jeanne and the dreadful outside?

"Ah!" said Louise, shuddering and shutting the window with a fierce gesture, "I might as well be dead! I shall be murdered! I don't care! Vive la liberté! O, the brave workmen! Hark, I hear the guns from the barricades! O, mon Auguste, go to be killed!"

She came close to the bed on which Marie Jeanne lay, and bent over it until her long black hair almost touched the child's face. How peacefully she slept, la petite! How sweet she was! One would say she was walking with the little Jesus in his flower garden. It is a sin to disturb her, but I cannot leave her, and I must go."

There arose from the street—the cry of a solitary voice. It was "A bas Charles Dix!" It stirred Louise to the heart. "I must go," she gasped; "My Auguste will have need of me to help him tear these vilains Bourbons from the throne!"

She approached the bed. "Ma mignonne," she said, tenderly, for Louise could make her voice tender sometimes, "I must get up. We are going to take a walk; wilt thou not go with thy Louise?"

Marie Jeanne awoke and looked up at Louise with innocent, wondering, sleepy blue eyes. "It is not morning, nurse?" she asked.

"Yes," answered Louise, speaking hurriedly and roughly. "Come, let me put on thy shoes and stockings. Now thy warm dressing gown. Let me wrap thee in this shawl. There!"

Louise had taken down her own shawl from the peg, and, tucking her skirt under her chin, gathered the little girl into the folds of a great shawl, and took her in her arms. "I will carry thee safe with me," she muttered, while her tears trembled so that she could scarcely locate the door, "though the saints only know when we shall come back."

Louise hurried into the street. It was dark and silent. But only a little way off, in the Champs Elysee, the scene was far different. There, torches were burning, and men and women were howling, and screaming, and dancing like a grisly fog, and singing the mad songs of the carnival. And over all hovered the spirit of prey, the echoes, "Down with the Bourbons!" "To the Palace!"

Louise began to run, still clinging to Marie Jeanne close, but the poor baby in a fold of crowd began to cry out sharply, "O, Louise, where art thou going? What is the matter?"

"Be quiet, wicked little wretch," said Louise, fiercely hanging the heavy folds of the shawl. Marie Jeanne dared say nothing more, for Louise had a look in her eyes that looked mischief; so she only gave a frightened sob now and then, and said very softly and meekly, "Louise the terrible is quite cross, I wan't my 'namma."

Louise dived into the crowd, and was swept onward, the great square, where, years before, another crowd had gathered to rejoice over the taking of two royal heads. Marie Jeanne looked out occasionally from her shawl prison, and her poor little body shook with fright at what she saw. Horrible eyes glared at her, shaggy locks flaming torches danced before her, and came so near sometimes that it was a wonder she was not burned up. She screamed, "Papa! mamma!" with all her strength, but nobody heard or cared to hear. Even Louise was for once too much occupied to find time to tell her poor little dear man would eat her up if she didn't keep still.

Louise was very glad about something, Marie Jeanne thought. She shook hands with a few men and called them her brothers. She kissed a few women and called them her sisters. But nobody knew anything about him. Marie Jeanne had never seen her nurse act so strangely before. She sang and laughed and cried and shouted, all in a breath, and Marie Jeanne in her fear and trembling, hid over when once she lisped forth, "Mon ami Charles Dix."

The crowd stopped at last before a church in the Rue St. Honoré. "Death to the priests!" shouted the people. "Death to the priests and the Bourbons!"

"My brothers," began the leader, a tall, lank man in the blue blouse of a workman, "we will take the priests now and the Bourbons at morning. Let us lose no time!"

"He is right!" shrieked Louise. "Oh, citizens and republicans, to your work!"

The leader continued, "O my brothers, cast your eyes upon the steps of the church and see the forms of those who have died in our cause! Have they died unavenged, and ——"

"O, mon Dieu," screamed Louise suddenly, with a voice and look of agony. She rushed through the crowd and made her way to the church door.

The workman continued, his harangue, but the priests and Bourbons were moving to Louise now, for the gaze of the orators, in lighting up the ghastly faces upon the steps of the church, had shown her one that she knew but too well. "O, mon Auguste," she sobbed, crowding down beside the dead man, "I told art dead, and my poor Louise, cruel, little wretch—this shaw, I told just no need of it! I was staunch the wound with it. Perhaps he lives yet!" She unwound the shawl from about Marie Jeanne's shivering little body and wrapped it around the dead workman's bleeding throat. Then, while the child cowered down by her side on the cold stone, she took the white face in her lap and sobbed over it, and moaned, "He is not dead! He is not!"

"Down with the priests!" again shouted the crowd, for the leader had finished his address. "Oh, my brothers," he cried, and sprang up the steps, trampling upon the bodies of the dead as he went.

Marie Jeanne, half unconscious through fear, saw the great mass approaching her, and shrieked, wild with terror, "Papa, Mamma, Louise, take me away!" The leader heard the frightened little cry, and stopped to examine the human obstacle in time to see Louise, who had time to look around for her dead lover, to see that she was trying to drag the poor corpse out of the way of the fast crowding feet, and then she saw the little girl flying through the air and seated at length upon the shoulders of the leader, carried away up among the fierce forces.

"Behold the goddess of liberty!" he cried, turning to his followers. "On, citizens! Drive away the priests and installe the priestess in her new temple!"

They forced open the iron door and Marie Jeanne made her triumphal entry into the dim, solemn church. But the crowd entered, too, and soon every corner of the grand old place was ablaze to the sacrilegious torch light. Suddenly the leader stopped, and set Marie Jeanne carefully down upon one of the side altars. "Sit here, little one," he said, "we are going to find the wicked priests. But we will come back for thee afterward. Wait here, petite!"

The crowd swept by her and out at the rear door in a fruitless search after the fated priests, who had long ago taken themselves off, with much more thought. And the little priestess was left alone, to cry herself to sleep on the cold altar, she could, to wonder why mamma did not come to kiss her, to call Louise in an agony of terror, to see horrible faces looking at her from out of the darkness, and to say the only prayers to the Christ Jesus. I don't know whether these tiny prayers were answered or not, but I do know that, when awakened by a clear, good, and hearty voice, as from the dead, she found herself in the cars as the train dashed up beside her and began a series of corkscrew curves, Marie Jeanne was comforted, and went fast asleep with the cat for a pillow. Her fur was so nice and soft! She was just like the little girl's own dear Mimi at home.

So these two so starry creatures clung to each other the whole long journey through, or warm companions, and far when the gray dawn began to creep through the beautiful purple and scarlet windows, Marie Jeanne woke up and wondered where the tall man could be who had promised to come back for her. She was so hungry! "The poor cat, she is hungry, too!" said the little girl to herself, heroically determined not to wake her own nursery.

But hunger began making her restless, and when Marie Jeanne's fairy little French instincts of neatness crowded upon her, and her courage gave way before the miserable prospect of no breakfast and an unwashed face.

"O, my face isn't clean," she sobbed. "I know it isn't. I want Louise to wash it. O, Louise!" The great tears ran down her nose and rolled off into the cat's gray fur.

Just then an officer of the King's guard appeared at the door, followed by a troop of men. He had been sent to search the church from fear such as he. As he entered he caught sight of the lone little group enthroned upon the altar, Marie Jeanne with her face buried in the warm gray breast.

"A child here!" he thought. "Poor little thing! It must have passed harder an uncomfortable night."

Marie Jeanne raised her head as he approached, and smiled a smile of recognition. "I'm so glad you have come, dear Papa Dupont," she cried joyfully; "I'm so hungry!"

"Sacre bleu! ma cherie," said Colonel Dupont, compassionately. "How did you come here, my poor child? I did not think the last time I rescued thee about the 'Lost Babes in the Wood' that you would ever act like those stupid children. I shall see no more fairies to turn my hair white, Marie Jeanne. But where are thy father and mother, and why art thou here all alone?"

Marie Jeanne related the history of her adventures as well as she could, and ended it with a sob and the "I want to go home!"

"Sacre mignonne," said the old soldier, taking her in his arms, "yes, you shall go home with me to pay a visit to Godmamma Dupont, and the dear godmamma will have breakfast ready for her, and some bonbons, too, perhaps, who knows?"

"But the dear cat," said Marie Jeanne, smiling through her tears, "she must go too. She was so warm in the night."

"Of course she shall go," was the good natured answer, and the child was made comfortable in a moment.

Colonel Dupont said something to an officer standing near, and then, with Marie Jeanne on his shoulder and the cat in his arms, he sallied forth to search for the unfortunate Madame Dupont.

When Marie Jeanne had been duly caressed and commiserated—when her spirits had been revived with breakfast and an invited bonbon, he went forth once more, this time in search to telegraph to the child's parents that their little daughter was in safe hands, or he knew just how anxious they would be when they should hear of the terrible excitement of the past night. On the way he stopped at the police office.

"Have you any intelligence of the fate of a woman named Louise Martigny among those who have disappeared since yesterday?" he asked of the chief official.

"Here is the book of entries; you may see for yourself," was the answer.

Colonel Dupont took the book and ran through the first few pages carelessly. "Ah," cried he, suddenly, "this must be she, the mad femme! What an end!" The entry read aloud.

"Early this morning the corpses of a man and woman were found together upon the steps of the Church of St. Roche. The man, who had a pistol wound in the throat, had been dead some time, and the woman had evidently been trampled to death in attempting to drag his body from under the feet of the crowd, that entered the church last night. Names unknown."

"Sacre!" commented the soldier, shrugging his shoulders cynically, "it is very strange that people can not learn to stay at home in times of danger. I must tell my little friend to provide herself with another nurse. Poor little one: it is a mercy that the good God loves better care of her at night than that crazy woman, or, if otherwise, there would have been a sad story to greet an Dantan with when he came home to look for his little daughter. But, never mind! Thanks to the great Power that moots the path of little children, thou art safe, ma petite, and long mayest thou live to be a blessing to thine old godfather.

THE GOUT AND ITS VICTIM.

"Ah! pain with a vengeance you seem in the joint of your great toe," quoth Monsieur Gout, "has, you flatter yourself, become a nuisance since eight o'clock, when you took your last dose of colchicum. Quite a mistake, my dear sir. The member is, anything, more swollen and inflamed than before. Observe, now, I shall take the liberty of inserting this little jawbone, just by the way of prose. A little it makes you wince. A very good sign that, however, since it proves that there is no ground for apprehending immediate mortification. Now do you know why it is that your toe is surgically sensitive? I'll tell you."

"You remember, three years ago, ordering a hatch of Burgundy. Previous to that time you had been in very good health, or you had plenty of occupation and little leisure for gluttony or wine-bibbing; your means were limited, and during the holidays you took a sufficiency of pedestrian exercise. Yet, in those days, I never expected to have the pleasure of making your acquaintance. I considered you as the admirer of a good liver, to become an ornament to the Anne Club. But, in your estimation, old Jones, the stock-broker—bless you, knew him very well indeed! Many a time have chatted on him when he was screaming like an aggravated jackass—your old friend Jones, they say, died as he left you his money—You are not going to sleep, are you? We, I call that rather unfriendly treatment, considering that I have taken the pains to come here and bear you company. A slight touch of the pincers may, however—

"Ah, it's right again; you are as live as a snapping-turtle. Where was I? Oh, remember. Old Jones left you his money, and you determined to take your ease. No one can blame you for that. What's the use of fagging to make more when you are in possession of a good $6,000 a year, and may indulge in a shooting box and hunters? But you could never make up the respect to be dog on the moors, and on horseback you were anything but a Duckworth. You preferred living in town, took chambers in the Albany, gave nice little recherche dinners, and, in that's book of Burgundy to which I have already alluded. It was of a fine vintage, strong and heady, and made the blood circulate in the veins like lightning."

"Old claret! the honor of our first introduction, though the sort was claret, not to mention sundry kinds of delicious entremets, etc., unconsciously contribute to lessen the distance between us. Then you took to late hours, hot rooms, and cognac, almost just by inclination, a catalogue of fashionable pleasures; and our acquaintance, at first only sight, has now ripened into friendship."

"But I really must not allow my feelings so divert me from the scientific purpose for which I have visited you to-night. Don't be afraid. I shall lay aside all ceremony, and vary the experiment by inflicting a few crops of molten lead between the joints and the bone. Ha! what an envious yell! Your lungs, I can assure you, are in a perfectly healthy state, and may last you for the next twenty years, if you don't force me to get into your stomach. By the way, what a silly proverb that is against putting things to an extremity! It is with the extremities always made room, of dealing in the first instance, and I have that very few people would allow me to depart from its practice. What is that you say? You wish that I would go to the devil? Pardon me, I'm unable in reply that you are so unreasonable. I am here, as you well know, in consequence of your indiscretions."—Blackwood's Magazine.

ORANGE PEEL POISONOUS

The Pacific Medical and Surgical Journal says: "Now that oranges are in every candy's mouth, it is well for parents to know that ill consequences may follow the swallowing of the pulp. Many years ago we had in charge two little girls, sisters, but aged six years of age, who were seized with violent inflammation of the bowels from this cause. One of them died in convulsions, and the other had a narrow escape. Since then we have cited a number of instances, similar in character, have come under our observation.

"Quite recently we saw a child something over a year old, that was attacked with violent dysenteric symptoms, for which no cause could be assigned. The attack came on during the passage of the steamer from San Diego. The symptoms were so identical with those which we had previously noticed to arise from poisoning by orange peel, that we were induced to inquire particularly of the child's nurse if an opportunity of getting the substance in its mouth. We were informed that it had been playing with an orange and biting it just before the attack of the disease. The discharges from the bowels were frequent, and consisted of blood and mucus. After a week of severe enteric inflammation, the child died. We have no doubt but the disease was brought on by the rind of the orange. Foreign in a small quantity must have been swallowed, yet, a very small quantity of such an indigestible and irritating substance will often produce most serious consequences.

A COCKNEY WALK.

The great Pacific journey I have done,
In many a town and tent I've found a lodging,
I think I've traveled to the setting sun,
And very nearly reached the Day of Judgment.
Like Tauhedot, in quest of Holy Grail,
I've been a seeker, yet I search in vain
To find the genuine type American.

Where is this object of my youth and wonder,
Who met me in the pages of Sam Slick?
Who opened every sentence with By thunder,
And whittled always on a stick and chick,
The more the crowd of friends around me thickens,
The less my chance to meet him seems to be;
Why did he leave my show him to Dickens,
To Dixon, Ba'a, Trollope, not to me?

No one accosts me with the words, Hal'al stranger!
Greets me as Berline Cuss, or shouts Old Hoss!
No grim six-shooter threatens me with danger,
Nor cries Quackle pass the butter, boss.
Round French dinner tables no cocktail ever passes,
No brandy smash my morning pour assets;
And petticoats are worn by all the asses,
And the pianos don't wear pantalettes.

The ladies, when you offer chicken salad,
Don't say, I'm pretty crowded now, I guess,
They don't sing Mrs. Barney Williams's acts
Of "looking round, I nor see and eyes,
Too, I've sat, the every other fellow,
In many a railway, omnibus, street car:
No gray-haired sire, Vi with a fierce umbrella,
And say, Sough, I mean to sit right thar!

Gone are the Yankees of my early reading,
Indeed, the Yankee land of eager guests!
Meet with culture, courtesy, good breeding
Artisans, men and women of the best
Of the low Britons, all my hopes are undone;
I take course of a disappointed man!
Don't come out here, but stay at home in London,
And see in books the true American.

FIVE ACRE FARMS

Many a farmer of five or ten acres makes more money than farmers with ten hundreds of acres.

The owing from the Country Gentleman of Nov. 22nd, puts the case thus: "Monsieur Bonnot will take five acres, he will first put it in good condition, for Monsieur Bonnot cannot make the ashes of corn on the manure heap of Arabia, with any means at his disposal, but Monsieur Bonnot will put his five acres in condition, and then they will yield as much as is in reason from a large farm. He will raise those things which bring the largest return from the amount of space occupied. Possibly he will give to strawberries one acre; asparagus half an acre; celery half an acre; one acre in mixed grasses for his cow, a space for kitchen garden and dwelling with out house, half an acre of currants, grapes, gooseberries, peach, etc., one and a half acres, and the margin of the whole will be occupied by the most profitable fruit trees. Monsieur Bonnot will not keep a horse, for he will eat up every month $12. He will keep a cow, because she will give him sixty cents worth of milk every day, and can live on the acre of mixed grasses with the refuse from the kitchen garden. Monsieur will have his poultry and eggs, and at the end of the year he will have more money than many a big farmer."

HOW THE WORLD WAGS.

The grandson of Patrick Henry has lately died in the menial capacity of treasury watchman at Washington.

Many of the lumbermen in the Michigan pineries are fugitives from justice. The immense forests render concealment from the officers of the law easy, and offenders adopt this method of earning a living for that reason.

About the middle of May—says the Florence Nazione—Germany sent to the Oecumenical Council at the Vatican a new species of pilgrims. These were a bevy of charming, blue eyed golden haired German maidens, ranging from 15 to 18 years, evidently the children of wealthy parents. They were chaperoned by two elderly ladies and a gentleman in the dignified garb of the Knights of Rome. Though pilgrims, the fair penitents did not arrive footsore and travel stained, but fresh and blooming, in coupes of the first class by railway, and their long white stalls, with black heads, served them in place of an opera cloak. Nor did they disdain the vanities of the world, for one dancing of the new waltz at the Theatre Principe Umberto was enjoyed by them with unmistakable delight.

THE LOCAL PAPER.—You owe it to yourselves to fully believe in its support, and expect from it as high-toned a character as you would do from any educator in your midst. It is in no sense beneath notice and care—for it is your representative, indeed, in its character, it is the summation of the importance, interest and welfare of you all. It is the aggregate of your own consequence, and you cannot ignore it without miserably depreciating yourselves.—New York Times.

Why do not more of our people set themselves to gardening? The greater part of the vegetables now being consumed in Colorado Springs are brought from Denver or other distant points, and money is sent out of town every week to pay for them. This is the way to cause to grow poor. Instead of buying from Denver, we ought to be selling to Denver and other places, and so enriching ourselves.

When the Greeley people first go together, they settled down to town life, waiting, like Mr. Micawber for something to "turn up." They seemed to have the idea that, having come to Colorado, they had done all that was needed, and would only have to open their mouths for the good things which were sure to drop in. But they found, in a few months, that waiting was not the thing, but that work was, and they had to set themselves to the work of production. They got out upon their five and ten and twenty-acre patches, and then their town began to get upon a solid foundation.

Many of our people are following the Greeley example, so far as the waiting open-mouthed goes; the sooner they follow the rest of the example and get to work to produce something the better.

Our Town is expecting to derive much benefit from the constant influx of visitors, but if the greater part of the vegetables and small fruits and butter and eggs and poultry and flour which they consume, is to be brought elsewhere, the benefit which we shall derive, as a Town, will be comparatively small.

We must do our utmost to supply our own wants and those of our visitors, in these simple and primary matters.

The Town Trustees have directed the Constable to enforce the law against the most prominent of our Whiskey Sellers. We hope that the Constable will not go to sleep about the matter.

Professor Cheever, of Ann Arbor University, Michigan, has been spending some time in Colorado Springs.

Among the visitors expected next month are Louis H. Meyer, Esq., and a large party from New York.

Mr. James B. Thompson, Territorial Assessor, has been staying at the Colorado Springs Hotel.

Takes a score of apple-bodied men and several small boys to see an Indian squaw pack a few buffalo-robes on to a little pony.

Edgar Thomson, Esq., (President of the Pennsylvania Railroad), and party, arrived by special car this noon, and have gone to Manitou to spend some time.

Mr. Wm. H. Thorne and family and Miss E. P. Leaman, of New York, arrived in Town a few days ago, and intend now to make it their permanent home. Mr. Thorne has built or purchased a large and commodious two-story residence on Tejon Street.

Dr. A. E. Barrett, of Colorado Springs, has been appointed Deputy U. S. Collector for the Seventh District of Colorado, consisting of El Paso and Fremont Counties.

Southward along Nevada Avenue, three of four new buildings have recently been put up for Mrs. Hughes', Mrs. Parsons', Mr. Simpson's, and others.

The citizens of Colorado City and Colorado Springs intend to have a picnic about the 4-mile corner of the former place on Tuesday next. We believe that, with fraternal benevolence, they extend a cordial invitation to all.

Mr. Hayward shines in rather hard that he should have to mend all the ragged holes for the town. Some of the people think it rather hard that they have so much to do with making the holes ragged.

The ladies of the Methodist Episcopal Church held their Sociable on Wednesday evening last. There was a large attendance, and the financial results were satisfactory. Ice Cream and Cake were served as refreshments.

A procession of four eight-yoke ox teams passed through Town on Wednesday, carrying the whole "fixings" of a large sawmill, including boiler and engine. We understood that it was the property of Mr. Lew Barnum, of Pueblo, and was on the way to Southern Utah.

Mr. Wolfrec, of the D. & R. G. Treasury, has gone south for a six weeks' Fishing Vacation. He expects to camp on the greater part of the time near Vermejo Valley, about 150 miles South-west of Pueblo.

The Danbury News man, who lately paid a visit to Denver, has been getting off a few jokes about hard cider, but the wit is rather heavy-footed. He is much more at home when paring up a beefstead or laying down a carcass than when face to face with the Rocky Mountains.

The Colorado Springs Jockey Club are making arrangements for two or more Races for prizes of $250 on the Fourth of July. It is anticipated that we shall have a large number of visitors on the national holiday.

Mr. John Mahony, one of the City Council of Denver, paid us a call on Thursday last, being in Town on business. Mr. Mahony carried the first U. S. Mail to Colorado City, about fifteen years ago, on which occasion the people turned out en masse to meet him. Those "good old times" are gone forever. The Denver and Rio Grande brings down the mail in three or four big sacks, and Mr. Mahony estimates fifteen or twenty thousand Denver citizens.

The D. & R. G. train from Denver, yesterday, was a heavy one, consisting of five coaches. The two forward coaches were filled with soldiers bound for Pueblo. They belonged to Company A, 5th Regiment, United States Infantry, and were under the command of Colonel Rice.

Grand display of natural fire-works on Thursday night last. Not all the pyrotechnic artists in the world could have furnished such a signal feast. It was free for everybody. There were dozens of people, however, who would have stood and gaped at a sky-rocket, who didn't think the exhibition worth looking at.

The Old Boy's appreciative remarks about the Pains at Manitou, seem to have stirred people up to a recognition of their virtues, and we hear of people besieging the doors so early in a morning that they cannot gain admittance. We hope, however, that the lessee will see to it that visitors can be accommodated just as early as they please.

According to our exchanges, grasshoppers are in full force in the Northern part of the Territory, and a good deal of apprehension for the crops is felt in consequence. There are very few round Colorado Springs so far, and we hope that the pests will leave us alone; it is quite possible they will not go over the Divide.

We were honored with a call yesterday from Col. E. Chase Kimball, the newly-appointed U. S. Attorney for Colorado, and Marshal Shafenburg. They have been making a tour of inspection through the Territory, and had just come up from Cañon City. They could not resist the temptation of taking a run over to Manitou.

Louis Dugas, Esq., Register of the Denver Land Office, and Mr. John Best, of Central, put their names on the Register of the Manitou House a few days ago. This point is fast becoming a favorite place of resort for owners in the Territory, as well as for those who live far out of sight of the Rocky Mountains.

About thirty Utes are encamped just south of Town and make daily visits to Town, for the purpose of selling Antelope skins and Buffalo Robes. Their present prices are: Buckskins, "no much wano," one dollar; "much wano," two or three dollars each; buffalo Robes, "no much wano," five dollars; "much wano," ten dollars. And we none of our innocent citizens think that the Utes know how to take care of themselves in the matter of a trade.

The Denver Times asks why the Rio Grande folks do not see fit sometimes from purely selfish motives of gain to indulge the Denver citizens with a day or two in Manitou, or in that delectable ground devoted to mythological horticulture—the "Garden of the Gods." It thinks that an occasional excursion—tickets for the round trip good for three days or a week, say $10 each, would give the Company the handling of a great many additional greenbacks.

Mr. Hemenway has been securing some photographs of the Cities during the past week. They charge just so much for each or having the carriers point out them, and some of them take as much pains with their photographs before the operation as a young lady would. We saw one old grave bestowing an enormous amount of the bow grease on his "back hair," in his endeavors to make it look "mighty good;" he used one hand for a comb and the other for a brush, and went to work in right good earnest, only pausing now and then to administer a vigorous scratch to some irritated part of his cranium.

When is our train coming? Long ago, we read in one of our Eastern exchanges how the reporter, when asking an evening watch, heard a suspicious sort of smack, followed by the remark in a female voice: "Oh! Charlie, I wonder if that mouse-ache lotion is good on your lips as it does on mine!" Then we read in the Denver News that their reporter and heard the same sort of thing followed by the same remark; and now the Denver Tribune has a reporter who has been similarly favored. We repeat: When is our train coming? Is there no young lady in town who will take pity on us and drop the mouse-ache when we are passing by?

The Colorado Springs Brick Company are now burning a kiln of about 100,000 brick, which they will have ready for market next week. Messrs. Payton & Co., who have a yard in the same neighborhood, expect to burn their first kiln the day after two.

There has not been much done in mining in this neighborhood for some time past, but we understand that work is to be commenced on a large scale next week.

Mr. Russell has been down from South Park, singing with some very rich samples of ore; he has already returned, and will be at work on the claim in a very few days.

The stockmen of the County have been "rounding-up" their cattle during the past week, and report that they are in excellent condition.

The Hon. Samuel M. Felton, the President of the Wilmington and Delaware Railroad Company, and now President of the Pennsylvania Steel Company, and Dr. Robert H. Lamborn, Vice President of the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company, with their families, left Philadelphia on Thursday last, for Colorado Springs, where they expect to spend some time recreating.

The Cheyenne Miner says: An old resident of this place, who has been engaged in this city for the past few years in receiving goods from the grocery formerly owned by Mr. G. Cole, took his departure for Colorado Springs, Colo., last week, to serve out the balance of his days in the capacity of a carriage horse. We are informed by Mr. Cole, who recently left Colorado, that Mr. Cole contemplates erecting a fashionable cambric shirt, in the day of two.

We are informed by Mr. Cole, who recently left Colorado, that Mr. Cole contemplates erecting a fashionable cambric shirt this summer, (that is, if his wife lives to get it made); as he is the owner of a splendid 17-year-old gray gelding which with his one, will make a gay team if they ever live to meet in that fair climate.

The Denver Tribune of a day or two ago has the following: An immense amount of baggage went out this morning. A rich and fashionable family, with three charming daughters, arrived from the East yesterday, and went to the Springs this morning. The proprietors of their hotel-keeper at the Springs will have to erect a separate building in which to store away the twenty five trunks—the girls having eight apiece, and the father but one.—The Railway Company are thoroughly prepared for any number of such travelers, having now provided themselves with two enormous baggage cars, which will accommodate an innumerable host of "Saratogas."

The members of the Congregation of Denver, W. G. M. Stone, pastor, made an excursion over the Denver and Rio Grande Railway to this place on Wednesday last. The party numbered 170. On arriving at Colorado Springs, they were met by Coaches that conveyed over a hundred of them to Manitou, the Garden of the Gods, Glen Eyrie, etc., returning for the homeward bound train at 6 o'clock in the evening, and reaching Denver at half past seven. Notwithstanding that the day was very warm, and the journey long and fatiguing, they expressed themselves as much delighted, and many of them hope to return before long, and spend a longer time in enjoying the attractions of this neighborhood. It was altogether a very pleasant affair.

An alarm was given on Thursday afternoon that the Manitou House was on fire. Thick clouds of smoke could be seen rising from the point where the Hotel is situated, and considerable excitement prevailed among the citizens. Mr. Ellison telegraphed to Manitou, the telegraph office being in the Hotel, but could get no reply, and this afforded additional reason for fearing that the Hotel was on fire. Several of the citizens set out on horseback and in carriages, but were re-assured, when a mile or so on the way, by the information that a bee-skep had just been fired in Williams' Canon, which lies immediately behind the Hotel, and that that was the origin of the smoke which had caused so much alarm.

We have gathered the following particulars concerning the growth of Fairplay, which show the rapid development which is taking place in the South Park country. Last year, the assessed value of property in Fairplay was $36,000; this year it is $96,000, an increase of $60,000 in one year. The population last year was 350; it is now about 1,300. This rapid growth of the South Park section is of immediate interest to our selves. Colorado Springs is the natural place of supplies for that section, and our business relations with it should be carefully cultivated. We advise our merchants to offer a possible inducement to induce them to trade here.

A fancy fair in aid of the Episcopal Church building fund is fixed for Wednesday and Thursday next. The members of the Ladies' Sewing Society have been engaged for some months past in the preparation of articles for sale, and their efforts have been greatly aided by contributions from distant friends. The Committee have also obtained the services of other demonstrations of material assistance, and the anxious co-operators are sanguine of success. Among the prizes for competition will be a Ring-cake, and a handsome Writing-case will be voted to the most popular young lady, and a Watch to the most popular gentleman who holds a similar popular position in the minds of the fair Company. Electors are to be asked to "vote early and often." One of the earliest of the fruits to be the publication of a Newspaper of local interest.

We have been shown a photograph of the plan of a large Hospital which the Catholics of the Territory propose to build at Manitou, Colo., in the place, near Denver. The photograph shows a very extensive building, with a large amount of architectural pretension. We understand that it is intended to build one wing at Manitou during the present year, and to complete the building subsequently. Other buildings, including a large church and a convent, are also contemplated. The necessary ground will be given by the Colorado Springs Company.

Our "Old Lady" friend has found irrigation very unpleasant work of late, owing to the numerous showers. We hope that she is now better satisfied with the arrangements of the weather clerk. She thus sets forth her views:—MISTER EDITOR:—I fully concur with the sentiments set forth in the poetical poem in your last week's paper which deplores the unusual fact of continual rains in this immediate visinity in consequence of which I have been compelled on four different occasions to resort to the use of my umbrella while in the act of irrigating my soil. No sooner wood I get my hoe and go out to work in the cinches than down wood come the rain in a way which I despise and though my nabors may talk and scare yet a little hard swearing is excusable in a woman of my age when forced to irrigate during a heavy storm with one hand and umberella in tother. Yours thecks unnatural AN OLD LADY.

THE PIONEER MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

This Company have recently made great improvements in their Mill, near to the Railway Depot, and are now prepared to execute a large amount of work. Their establishment is a striking proof of the spirit with which so many of our Colorado Springs people go to work when they put their hands to a thing.

The old engine has been taken out, and a new 25-horse power engine has replaced it. The old Boiler has been retained, and answers well, as it is due. It needs to be was in savings of the establishment.

On the same floor as the engine is the principal part of the machinery, including a planer with a capacity of from 10,000 to 12,000 feet per day, a Moulding Machine, with a capacity of from 12,000 to 15,000 feet per day, two Circular Saws, 22-inch and 7-inch, a Lathe for turning balusters of wood work, and a Flooring Machine with a capacity of about 7,000 feet per day.

On the upper floor, there is a Scroll Saw, but this floor is chiefly devoted to the manufacturing of Sash, Doors, etc.

Thirteen men are constantly employed, and we understand that Mr. Fairchild, the manager and part owner, expects to increase his staff shortly.

PROGRESS OF BUILDING IN TOWN.

A ramble round the Town shows that a large amount of building has been done during the past few weeks. The following are among the buildings recently completed, or in course of construction.

On Huerfano Street, is the new Stone Bank Building, which has just had its head put on it. The shape of a galvanized iron cornice. We understand that a considerable portion of the money which this building stands has been secured in small sections, and other buildings will probably soon be erected. On the same street is a new Meat Market just completed and occupied by Mr. Howard, and nearly opposite to it is a new Barber Shop.

West of Cascade Avenue, on the north between that avenue and the Railway, Mr. Buckingham has completed a Store and Residence. Messrs. Parris and Carr have put up two small Residences. Mr. Rataizak is building a commodious Restaurant, which is nearly finished. Mr. Ellison and Messrs. Craig and Mullen have their residences ready for occupation. Mr. E. L. Rouse is preparing to build a one-and-a-half story Store Residence, 50 feet by 27 feet, and Mr. Maxwell and Mr. Reed are building dwelling-house residences. In the portion of town this part of the Town, which has only recently come into market, will soon be pretty well built up.

Round the South Public Square, several new buildings have recently been erected. Mr. Payton has a Stone Cottage near to the Exchange House, and Mr. T. C. Parsons has completed a good-sized dwelling-house residence, in close proximity to which two small buildings (to which the same epithets recently cannot be applied) have been put up. Mr. Bussey's Carriage Factory is "in the rear;" and near to it two or three residences help to line out the street.

At the south end of Tejon Street, Mr. Hayes has recently finished a neat little residence, and the following have also built on the same street during the past few weeks: Mr. Joseph Adams, Mr. John H. Lee, Mr. Leonard, and Mr. W. G. Hopkins. Mr. S. E. Moore has erected a house on Pike's Peak Avenue.

At the south end of Nevada Avenue, Mr. John Russell has a commodious residence (and white and green roofed) with a capital garden, one of the very few, we understand, which the Town has to show. Mr. Zimmerman, Mr. Washington, and Mr. C. Birge also have new residences in this part of the Town. On the same avenue, next to Huerfano Street, Mr. Macomber's building a large house.

At the south end of Weber Street, Mr. D. K. Lee and Mr. John Fabry are building residences.

On Pueblo Avenue, Mr. Gibson has a house going up, and on Vermejo Street, Mrs. Hurd is making additions to her house.

At the south end of Wahsatch Avenue, Mr. W. Harper and Mr. T. N. Wiley have residences just completed; Mr. Kerrick has a one-and-a-half story house nearly finished, and on the next lot, a fine one-and-a-half story building, with a bay window, is being pushed forward for Mr. Henry Burr. Close to this Mrs. McGuire has a nice little residence just finished, round which she is devoting considerable space to flower-gardening. Mr. T. P. Bunnell, Mr. House, Mr. Duncan McKinsey, and Mr. Alex. Stewart also have residences just finished in this neighborhood.

On Pike's Peak Avenue, Mr. W. A. Young has recently made an addition to his residence, nearly doubling its size. The Episcopal Church, of the plan of which we gave a full description, is being pushed forward with energy, the whole of the foundations being in, and most of the mortress bases being in their places. Mr. Colburn has been making additions and improvements to his residence. The Rev. T. C. Millington has just completed a tasteful little residence, and Mr. Pease has a fine two-story house going up nearly at the end of the Avenue.

On the corner of Pike's Peak and Wahsatch Avenues, Dr. Barrett is building a fine story-and-a-half residence, which promises to be one of the handsomest in town. Next to it, on Wahsatch Avenue, is Dr. Sumner's, which is now very nearly finished, and is also a handsome building. Next to Dr. Sumner's, Mr. Howard has a little residence in progress.

On Kiowa Street, several small houses have lately been built, including Mr. Washburne's, Mr. M. M. Parker's, Mr. W. Miller's, and Mr. J. B. Donovan's. These are crowded pretty close together.

On the corner of Kiowa and Weber Streets is the Baptist Church Building, no evidence, however, of progress, for it has now been standing in an unfinished state for a long time. Want of funds is one reason which we have heard a reason, a mistake in organization another, and in the conveyance of the lots is another. We trust, however, that some way out of the difficulty will be found soon, and that the building will be completed.

On the opposite corner is Mr. Grannis' residence, which has been pushed forward with great rapidity. This will make a handsome building, and be a great ornament to that part of the town. Further west on Kiowa Street, Mr. G. H. Stewart has two small residences which have recently been completed.

Around the North Public Square, a few improvements have been made. Mr. Weed has finished his large residence, and Mr. Palmer has his nearly completed. Mr. Humphrey is making additions to his house, and Mr. Potter has a tasteful little place nearly ready for occupation.

On Tejon Street, northward from Pike's Peak Avenue, is the late Mr. Wright's Stone Store which is now approaching completion, Mr. Wright's death having occasioned considerable delay. Higher up, Mr. W. H. Thorne has just finished his story-and-a-half residence, and his brother has been making additions to the house purchased from Mr. A. Sutton. Mr. Dawson goes on with the "finishing touches" to his house, and Mr. Sumner has got in the stone foundations of a house just beyond. Mr. Adams's building on the opposite side of the street, and is trying a new experiment—a mixture of frame and adobe which may be worth the while of some of our intending builders to inspect. A number of new buildings are in progress still farther northward.

On Cascade Avenue Mr. Curtis has the foundations of a residence laid, and Mr. Hartwell is busy at work on his extensive and ninety feet caravansai, which, we understand, is to be divided into small tenements.

We caught a glimpse, in passing, of numerous other buildings on the outskirts, the most having come into existence since the last occasion that we went up and down the streets in Colorado Springs, and the above particulars are given to give an idea of the amount of building which has been going on of late. The Town grows in all directions, and many of the buildings which are now being erected are of a superior character, and show a great improvement upon some of those which were erected in the earlier periods of its history.

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

The Central Register says: Some weeks ago a number of young men applied at the Winnebago mines for work. They were ready to do anything at any price, although for two dollars per day. The lessee told them he had no work for the men he wanted, and could not employ them. They then asked if there were silver mines that they could work on shares. Pointing to a small vein of silver on the opposite side of the creek, Mr. Barrett said that they might go into that and see what they could do. The crevice was not very wide, but he thought it was rich. They accepted the offer and went to work at once. As a result, they now are making something better than wages, a two dollars a day, or even five dollars. That's what may be called "business."

The Laramie County Express gives some currency and credit to the reports of rich gold and silver discoveries in the vicinity of La Porte and Fort Collins. Several fine nuggets of gold have recently been found in the streets of the former place, and considerable excitement prevails in consequence, as the search is general throughout the neighborhood.

The Central Register has information of the effect that on last Sunday, at Longmont, a man named James Dilvey, employed on the Golden and Gilsburg road, was run over by a construction train, and instantly killed, his body being reduced to an unrecognizable mass.

The Denver News says: A little girl named Williams, whose parents reside in Nevada, Gilpin County, tumbled into a shaft thirty feet deep, Sunday, and instead of bellowing about it, and raising the neighborhood, quietly climbed the ladder, and, stepping into the kitchen where her mother was at work, boasted of her achievement.

As the sun is gaining power every day, and as sunstrokes are among the possibilities of the heated term, even in this climate, it may be well to remind people that the best preventative is a piece of plain sponge sewn inside the hat, and sprinkled with water occasionally in the course of the day.—News.

AN AGENT IN DIFFICULTY.

We learn a joke or an incident or something of the kind, on one of our most popular insurance agents, which will bear well in print. He is well known as a pleasant genial fellow, who would not willingly offend a man, or cause any mental or bodily uneasiness for the sake of getting out the best policy ever invented. While he is reliable and energetic in his business, he has the delicacy not to intrude himself upon people. But upon one occasion, not a great while ago, while passing through the suburbs, he was forcibly struck by the appearance of a fine house, and thought what a pity it would be if this should be burned and become a dead loss to its owner; and, in the pure spirit of insane benevolence, without waiting for a second thought, he found himself ringing the door bell. Inquiring for the man of the house, he was politely ushered into the parlor by a pleasant faced servant girl, who proceeded into another room to announce his arrival. A quick glance about the room convinced him that the family were both wealthy and refined, and he began to repent his rashness, which was heightened by a conversation between the girl and her master, which he could not fail to hear, the door being slightly ajar. Further information that a stranger was waiting in the parlor, was answered by a deep groan. Further information was given to the effect that the visitor was not very old, and very gentlemanly appearing. This brought out another groan. "And," continued the girl, "he is good looking." A groan so deep and solemn was the response that the agent was startled, and came near groaning himself. Then there was a silence. Presently a masculine voice was heard, bewailing his fate in having caught when his rheumatism was so bad he could scarcely stir. Then there was a movement and a shuffling which indicated the approach of the door, and the head of the agent became a highway for a rush of conjectures to fit through, concerning the treatment he would probably receive when the business of his call became known.

He was well enough satisfied that he would receive no muscular chastisement, because it was evident that the other party was too weak in the back for that; but he could not help thinking how unpleasant it would be for him in case the old gentleman was accompanied by a revolver, or double barreled shot-gun; and he eagerly looked about to see if there was not a big chair, or rocking-glass, or some thing behind which the could lodge. These moral reflections were cut short by the door swinging open and the entrance of a gentleman somewhat advanced in years, holding a pillow to the small of his back with both hands. "Well," said the agent, "I am sorry I have called when you were sick, because I don't believe you are half as glad to see me as I am to see you; but as I was going past, your house attracted my attention, and I called to see if it was insured." As he announced this, he watched the gentleman's movements with one eye, and the door with the other. This precaution was well taken, for the old man suddenly dropped his pillow and seized a large family bible which lay on the centre table, no other weapon being at hand, and made a rush for the agent. Just at that moment the agent happened to recollect a business engagement which he had in another part of the city, and which had entirely slipped his memory, and he withdrew to attend to it.—Denver Times.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

The Suspension Spring Bed Bottom, which is speedily coming into general use, is a superior article in every respect; is made of the best tempered Steel Spiral Springs, with iron rings and hooks, over a light wood frame, and weighs only thirty pounds. Its cleanliness and durability especially commend it to House-keepers and Hotel men. There are no slats to break, no refuges for bugs, no lateral motion, it is perfectly noiseless, does not roll to the centre, no matter how unequal the weights. For comfort it is not equaled, and is very durable.

The Rathish News reports that on the 6th inst. Professor Mommsen, the distinguished historian of Rome, and a few friends, left the city of Naples to enjoy the moonlight in Carracci's Forest. While luxuriating in the cooling air and the delicious moonshine they were attacked by robbers, beaten, and stripped of their money and watches.

A correspondent of the Pacific Coast Journal writes that paper: "Your advice to be cheerful at meal time, is thrown away as far as we are concerned; we are not cheerful, but jolly. The dinner hour is one of hilarity. Why should I not be happy? I have the best husband in the world, a dress of silk, a quarter section of land, a dog cart, with all the modern improvements. My principal trouble is a disagreement with the hens as to the way they should make themselves useful; they insisting on setting, while I much prefer they should continue to lay."

FOR SALE AT A BARGAIN.

FROM THE COLORADO CHIEFTAIN.

The proprietors of Out West, have just published a neat little work, entitled "Among the Mountains," a guide book to Colorado Springs, etc. This is very neatly printed and seems to contain a large amount of valuable and interesting matter about the neighborhood it represents. On the cover, there is a fine lithographic view of Pike's Peak and the Garden of the Gods, and on the inside, a map of Colorado Springs and vicinity. The work is an unmistakable evidence of the enterprise of the proprietors of Out West, and the leading people of the Springs.

[FROM THE ROCKY MOUNTAIN NEWS.]

Relates particularly to Colorado Springs and vicinity, giving maps, routes, etc., and constituting an entire guide book of that locality. It should be in the hand of every tourist.

VARIETIES.

Pleasures waste the spirit more than pains; therefore the latter can be endured longer and in greater degree than the former.

Don't never quarrel with a loafer. Scurrility is his trade; you never can make him ashamed, but he is sure few make you.—Billings.

There's an old lady with false teeth out West, who wants to know if the Yankees can't invent some new way for putting on pillow-slips.

Next to Rothschild, the wealthiest banker in Vienna is a man who in his youth started as an errand boy at a salary of one florin a week.

"Why should we celebrate Washington's birthday more than mine?" asked a teacher. "Because he never told a lie!" shouted a little boy.

"I never go to church," said one; "I spend Sunday in settling accounts." "The day of judgment will be spent in the same manner," was the reply.

An exchange says Lyman Beecher used to pray: "Oh, Lord, keep us from despising our rulers, and keep them from acting so that we can't help it."

One of the queerest features of the English coal statistics is the statement that an additional ton of coal has to be mined each year for every person added to the population.

We laugh at sheep because, when one of them leads the way all the rest follow, forgetting that it may be; and, suppose sheep laugh when they see us doing the very same thing.—Billings.

A reporter for a Wisconsin paper writes: "Those who personally know our late esteemed fellow-citizen, Colonel ——, will regret to hear that he was fatally assaulted last evening, but not killed."

Charles says: "At the first entrance into the estate, keep a low sail. Thou must rise with honor; thou canst not fall without shame. The beginning of his father ended, shall end as his father began."

Heavy reading is very fashionable in New York, and many young ladies are said to discuss the writings and theories of Darwin, Huxley and Emerson in a manner which would startle the authors themselves.

A writer in the Congregationalist gives a list of twenty-five free churches, all of which report that the system works well. The writer has heard of but one church which has abandoned free pews after trying them.

The last best fruit which comes to the perfection, even in the kindliest souls, is tenderness toward the hard, forbearance towards the unfortunate, warmth of heart toward the cold, philanthropy toward the misanthropic.

A horse-chestnut tree in Hartford, Conn., has distinguished itself by an eccentric habit of blossoming on opposite sides in alternate years for twenty-nine years, as, except that every seventh year it has no blossoms, it has done ever.

"If you want to see what men will do in the way of conformity," says a modern philosopher, "take a night hat for your subject of meditation. I dare say there are twenty-two millions of people at this minute wearing one of these hats to bed."

Hart, the postmaster of Boston, advertises: "Merchants applying at the post-office for permission to buy for their boxes are requested to bring the exact change." The Boston Post remarks that the "exact change" needed most there is a new postmaster.

When the Empress Eugenie was in the height of her beauty and position some one asked her as "the most enviable of mortals." The Empress answered, "Oh! yes, very, very happy; but one fine morning they will throw us out of the windows into the street!"

The following sentence was dictated by the late Lord Palmerston to even British Cabinet Ministers, not one of whom, it is said, spelled it correctly: "It is disagreeable to witness the embarrassment of a narrasher secretary gauging the symmetry of a potatoe potato."

There is no effect without a cause. Many intelligent physicians affirm that careless sleeping nights is due to back drainage. When Prince Albert died, and later, when the Prince of Wales was dangerously ill, the cause was so evident that there went up a general cry, "Boots to your drains."

Bridget came to her mistress and asked for a needle and thread. "Do you want it fine or coarse?" asked the lady. "Sure an' I don't know, ma'am," said Bridget. "What do you want it for?" asked the mistress; "if you tell me that, I may know what to give you." "We, mum, the cook has just told me to string the janes, an' sure an' I want a needle and a thread, mum."

The Boston Post says: "We scarcely know what additional article the fashionable ladies can suspend from their waist belts. Fans, smelling salts, vinaigrettes, handkerchiefs and card-books now dangle at their sides when promenading." Nothing additional, more appropriate, perhaps, than a washing-machine, a cooking-stove and a sewing-machine, with written instructions as to the best method of using them, adds an old bachelor.

Let young men wear old boots, hat and coat, if they can honestly afford the new. It requires uncommon courage, but it will have good results. Men schooled to such deeds of heroism will refuse to endorse bad notes, will not vote for scamps, nor kneel in the mud to scoundrels who give lavishly what they have gained lawlessly, nor take with pride the name of a villain, however exalted.—Tom Hall.

"A Yankee in Paris, who was listening to the boasts of a lot of English and French artists about the wonderful genius of their respective countrymen, at first "cooled off," and said: "Oh, gosh! You git out! Why, there's Hi Devine, of our village, who can hang a piece of pork so lazy like, nobody knows that the minute you throw it into the water it will sink to the bottom, jest like a stone."

A young man by the name of Chicks, recently conceived the idea of keeping matches, after they were dipped, in paraffine, so as to protect them from moisture. For this improvement, we are told, he now receives from a well-known match manufacturing establishment in New York, an income of about ten dollars per day. Matches thus prepared, are said to ignite readily, after having lain in a basin of water an entire night.

Professor Agassiz, in a recent lecture on "Changes in the Egg," described Cantoniage, Mass., stage, that "one may open dozens of eggs brought from the country for sale, and find that no one is in a perfectly natural condition, because the relation of the parts within the eggs have been changed by the jars and vibrations incident to transportation." The moral of which teaches not to send your money away from home to buy eggs for hatching.

One day when Lord Brougham was driven to the House of Lords in the vehicle of his own invention, which Robinson, the coach-maker, had christened after him, he was met in the Lobby Room by the Duke of Wellington, who, after a low bow, accosted him, "I have always taken care to live under the impression that your lordship will go down to posterity as the great apostle of education, the emancipator of the negro, the reformer of the law; but no—you will here be known only as the seventh peer of a carriage." "And, my dear duke, have a man been under the delusion that your grace would be remembered as the hero of a hundred battles, the deliverer of Europe, the conqueror of Napoleon; but no, your grace will be known as the inventor of a pair of boots." "I have forgotten these, Your Lordship."

As the last annual preservation day of the London University the Chancellor, Earl Granville, distributed the medals and distinctions awarded during the year. The announcement in the report that seven ladies had passed the general examinations, and a suggestion by Mr. Lowe that ladies should be allowed to enter themselves in the full curriculum of the University, elicited hearty cheers and hisses.

A correspondent of the Boston Globe closing a notice of life in Vienna, expresses his deep admiration of the Viennese girls: "In fact, under twenty-five there are no ugly ones; while, for every third young lady one meets, one's heart jumps down into one's boots. They are mostly fair, with the clearest of complexions, beautiful hair and calling eyes, and the same remarks apply equally to the servants. I have been in many capitals, but I never was so completely prostrated as I am here."

Curran, when Master of the Rolls in Ireland, was going one day to a levee at the Castle. There was a great press of carriages, when, all at once, he was struck by the pole of the carriage which followed him crashing through the back of his. He hastily put his head out of the window, crying to the coachman, "Stop, stop! the pole of my carriage behind is driven into us!" "Arrah, then, it's all right, again, your honor," replied the unmoving, "for I've just drove my pole into the carriage before." This is a sample of the Irish wit. Curran used to cite as perfect.

James Oliphant, minister of Dumbarton, had a curious habit of making running comments, in a low tone, to voice, as he read the Scriptures. Hence, as it never cured him of the practice, those seats nearest the pulpit were the most highly prized. There are two samples of his "pulpit notes:"—Reading of the swine running into the sea, he muttered, "Oh, that the devil had been drowned!" Reading Peter's remark, "We have left all and followed thee," he said, "Aye boastin' Peter, aye braggin'; what had ye to leave but on an old crazy boat, and may be two or three rotten nets."

In the early part of his life, and for his benefit, some attempt was made to curb the scene with Caerites—

> What is the reason that you use me thus?
> I love you ever—but for no matter;
> Let Hero go, mine I do what he may,
> The cat will mew, the dog will have his day—

he entered so much into the scene as to throw himself out of the words, which he concluded thus: "Loved you ever,—but it's no matter; the dog will mew—no, that's the cat; the cat will bark—no, that's the dog; the cat will—no, the dog; the cat, no—something about mewing and barking; but, upon my word of honor, ladies and gentlemen, I know nothing more of the matter."

We have met with a beautiful story, now a Russian soldier, one very cold, piercing night, went out sentry between one sentry box and another. A poor worn-in man, never with pity, took off his coat, and rent it to the poor soldier to keep him warm; adding that he should soon reach home, while the soldier would be exposed out of doors for the night. The cold was so intense that the soldier was found dead in the morning. Some time afterward the poor man was laid on his death-bed, and in a dream saw Jesus appear to him. "You have got my coat on," said the man. "Yes, it is the coat you lent me that cold night when I was on duty and you passed by. I was naked and you clothed me."

Retiring from business, common and regular as it is, is a great hardship. No man should retire from business until he retires to his grave. When his faculties become shaky and full from age, he should reduce the number of hours in his daily work, reduce them just as his strength decreases, but in no case should the change in his occupation or cease his business altogether. It may be a pleasure to an estate in the country, to which he retires at an early hour in the afternoon, and he may lost some his morning arrival till two or three hours after the younger people have begun, but he must not quit or make a radical change. We know of nothing more sure to lead to dyspepsia, insanity, and suicide than retiring from our business.—Dio Lewis.

Madame Patti narrowly escaped a serious accident recently, in London, at the Royal Italian Opera. The performance was "Dinorah," in which, at the close of the second act, the heroine is supposed to cross a bridge which breaks down. In stage language, this part is "cooked," and the crowd is made to by a super disguised as Dinorah. A good deal of changing occurs, and Madame Patti, making room for others, leant against a screen, which gave way, and her right foot slipped through a small gap in the platform, nearly up to the hip joint. She fell backward, and it was some seconds before she could be extricated. She was carried in a state of insensibility to her room, where she was seen by Mr. Lennox Browne, professional attendance on the stage. Though somewhat severely bruised and shaken, Madame Patti has sustained no serious injury, and, with characteristic courage, as soon as she came to herself, she dressed for the next act, and begged that the accident might pass unnoticed. She played her part to the close of the opera with her accustomed animation and effect.

INFORMATION FOR STRANGERS.

COLORADO.

To borrow the expression of a well-known writer, the Territory of Colorado traddles the Rocky Mountains like a saddle—a part of it being on their eastern flank, a part on their western flank, and a part of it being taken up by the mountains themselves. It lies between the 37th and 41st parallels of north latitude, and the 102nd and 109th meridians of west longitude, being bounded on the north by Wyoming and Nebraska, and on the east by Nebraska and Kansas, and on the south by New Mexico, and on the west by Utah. The area embraced forms nearly a square, containing about 106,475 square miles, or 67,810,000 acres—a greater extent of country than all of Great Britain, with a colony or two included, and quite as large as New York, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts, with New Jersey thrown in for good measure.

For many reasons, Colorado is one of the most remarkable sections of country on the face of the earth.

Though not geographically, it is really, the centre of the North American Continent. Up to its giant peaks, there is a gradual slope on every side, from the Atlantic on the east, the Pacific on the west, the Gulf of Mexico on the south, and the confines of the Polar Sea on the north.

The dwellers on its "plains" or lower lands, live, on the average, about a mile above the level of the sea; while those who live in its "mountain towns," are lifted still nearer heaven.

Its scenery is magnificently grand. Its climate is delicious, cheering and healthful. The clear, rare air and the bright sunshine, which continually characterize it, act like a charm upon the system, invigorating the bodily powers and inducing constant "good spirits." The dryness and purity of the atmosphere render it especially suitable for such as are of consumptive or asthmatic tendencies, or suffer from any affection of the throat or lungs; such—unless the disease has obtained too firm a grip—are almost certain to regain health and strength.

The resources of the country are almost limitless and innumerable.

Its mountains are seamed and streaked with precious wealth of all kinds—gold and silver, copper and lead, coal and iron.

Cradled in their brawny arms and lying at their outspread feet, are peaceful valleys, wherein the farmer raises crops of rich abundance. Owing to the small rainfall, irrigation is necessary to the cultivation of the soil; but this, when understood, is comparatively little labor, and far more than compensated for by the great yield which is obtained.

Eastward from the mountains, the "great plains" stretch in almost boundless extent, covered with rich grasses, which render them the best pastures in the world. Sheep and cattle thrive upon them with but little care, and with few exceptions, through the winter as well as the summer. During the fall, the dryness of the atmosphere cures the grasses, sealing up in them all their nutritious qualities and leaving them standing upon the ground as natural hay—a winter stock of feed, needing no preparation and no housing.

The foot-hills are covered with timber, and contain almost every variety of building stone. Some of the rivers afford water-power of the finest character.

In short, Colorado offers all the natural resources necessary for carrying on the three great productive industries—Mining, Agriculture, and Manufactures—and all the attractions of scenery and climate calculated to make it a healthful and delightful home.

EL PASO COUNTY.

El Paso County is one of the central counties of the Territory and embraces a fair share of its principal physical characteristics—mountain, valley, and plain. Along its northern border stretches the Great Colorado "Divide," a pine-covered mountain spur, which takes its name from the mountains it separates the settled portion of Southern Colorado from the Arkansas Valley. Its eastern and western slopes are dotted with the cabins of settlers, who have located upon the numerous streams which have their rise in the Divide, and are tributaries to the Arkansas River. The Divide is a spur of the Rocky Mountains, and is the highest point in the county, its summit being 9,000 feet above the sea level. The county has a continuous slope southward, its southern boundary being eighteen miles north of the Arkansas, the distance from north to south being about forty-two miles. This southward slope—exposing the whole of the county, for a garden war, to the full sunlight—has a marked effect upon its climatic characteristics. The distance from the eastern boundary of the county to the foot of the mountains, is about forty miles, and beyond that, the county embraces about thirty miles of mountainous country, making the total width about seventy miles. The area embraces about 1,635,000 acres, of which upwards of 94,000 acres has been "entered."

Though Pike's Peak—the great focal point of the gold excitement which first brought Colorado into notice—is situated in this county, there are few, if any, known valuable deposits of the precious metals; hence, El Paso county has no place among the mining counties of the Territory. It has, however, the advantage of a market in the mining districts to the west, which are reached by the Rio Grande. These mining districts are rapidly growing into great importance, being amongst the richest in the Territory, and will cause a large demand for agricultural and other products.

Most of the agricultural land which can be watered directly—that is, by ditches taken out of the creeks—is already taken up, and such land is now worth from $10 to $50 per acre. Experiments, however, will shortly demonstrate the matter of artesian wells, and if they prove successful, thousands of acres of the most tempting land—still open for pre-emption—will be made available for irrigation and cultivation. Scattered through the mountains are numerous small "parks," or "parks," on which grass and vegetables, of the finest quality, can be raised to even greater advantage than in the lower valleys.

In like manner, most of the land available for stock ranges, having water upon it, has been taken up, and ranches command from $500 to $3,000. There can be no doubt, however, that almost anywhere on the plains, wells could be sunk at a small expense, from which water could be drawn by wind-mills or other means. Necessity has not yet driven the people to invention, but will, no doubt, ere long, as every succeeding year makes more and more manifest the fact that the country which has been regarded as valueless is in reality of the most valuable character, when a little trouble is taken to aid Nature by the contrivances of art.

The progress of the Stock Interests in the county may be gathered from the following figures taken from the Assessor's reports for 1871 and 1872: In the former year there were 779 horses, 190 mules, 5,734 cows, 2,321 oxen, 3,031 sheep, and 576 swine. In 1872, there were 960 horses, 96 mules, 6,988 cows, 1,145 oxen, 6,538 calves, 50,314 sheep, and 363 swine. Last year, the wool crop of the county amounted to 172,872 pounds.

The Lumber Trade is an important part of the business of the county, there being fourteen mills constantly engaged in it, and more lumber-lands in El Paso county than in any other county in the Territory.

COLORADO SPRINGS.

The town of Colorado Springs is situated in the centre of El Paso county, at a point where the Monument Creek unites with the Fontaine qui Bouille, and where the Pike's Peak opens upon the plains.

It is a principal station on the Denver and Rio Grande Railway, seventy-six miles south of Denver, the nearest station in the Territory, and forty-two miles north of Pueblo.

The town takes its name from the numerous valuable mineral springs in the immediate neighborhood. The most important of these are grouped together about five miles to the west, in a beautiful glen, to which has been given the name of Manitou. These are the celebrated "Boiling Springs," which, years ago, were made known to the world by Fremont, Ruxton, and other writers. Formerly they were visited on account of their medicinal virtues by the native tribes of Indians, who regarded them as supernatural phenomena caused by the direct action of the Great Spirit. In latter times, notwithstanding the difficulty of access to them, their fame has attracted large numbers of invalids, anxious to avail themselves of the healing waters. During last year, large sums of money have been expended in laying out and adorning the ground in the neighborhood, a handsome, commodious, and comfortable hotel has been built, bath-houses have been fitted up, and many other conveniences provided. Now that these famous springs are so easily accessible, and that every provision has been made for the comfort of visitors, there can be no doubt that a few years will suffice to make them as attractive a point as is Saratoga in the East. Thousands will throng to them every year, and many will take up permanent abodes around them. The springs are seven in number, and are useful both for drinking and bathing purposes, being highly beneficial in rheumatism, skin diseases, general debility, and numerous other ailments which we need not catalogue.

In addition to these wonderful springs, some of the most remarkable and magnificent scenery in the American Continent is in proximity to the town.

Directly in front is Pike's Peak, the most celebrated of the Rocky Mountains, rising to a height of nearly 14,000 feet above sea level, its head covered with snow all the year. Right and left of the Peak is a long range of "Foot Hills" lofty mountains they would be termed in any other land, "infinitely diversified with variety of form and outline, with rocky crags and tumbled boulders and smooth slopes, with constant play of light and shade, with contrast of rich and sombre colors, with streaks of snow and dark groves of pine"—the whole forming a panorama of exceeding beauty, of which the eye never tires.

Three miles from town is the wonderful and famous "Garden of the Gods," in which huge rocks, hundreds of feet high, and of the most fantastic shapes, and gorgeous colors, form a scene which excites the wonder of all who behold it. Close to the Garden is "Glen Cyrie," with its Queen's Canon, equally wonderful and beautiful. Five miles to the southwest of the town is "Cheyenne Canon," a magnificent gorge, whose suspended walls of rock and beautiful waterfalls give it an almost unrivaled grandeur. Twelve miles north is "Monument Park," studded with groups of lofty columns of sandstone, which look like obelisks of some by-gone race of giants. Frame literally beyond Manitou are the Rainbow Glen, the Union and Fairy Fountain, and the Ute Pass. Spread in all directions are scenes of grandeur and of beauty. "The advantage of this point," says a recent writer, "is that it lets you at once into the heart of the mountains."

The Springs and the Scenery combined are destined, of themselves, to build up a town of considerable size and importance. Here will be a place of resort of almost unequalled attractions—known the world over. Last year brought thousands of visitors from almost every State in the Union, and from foreign lands, and each succeeding season will bring an increasing throng; whilst many, who are in search of health, have a ready chosen item their permanent home, and many more will settle here in order to secure the same inestimable boon.

Everything possible is being done to heighten the attractive character of a spot on which Nature has bestowed so many advantages. It is intended to make Colorado Springs not only famous as a Sanitarium, but also as an educational centre, and a home of refined society. Large reservations have been made for schools and church institutions, and the Town, although still in its infancy, has undertaken the erection of a costly school-house. Wide streets and avenues and spacious squares have been laid out, and thousands of trees have been planted.

Ample funds will accumulate to carry on the work of beautifying the town, of erecting public buildings, and of constructing necessary public works. The town is a Colony Town, and the whole of the profits derived from the sale of the Colony Lots and Lands, are appropriated to public improvements. The land having been bought in large tracts at low rates, and being sold to colonists in small lots at advanced figures, many thousands of dollars will thus be devoted to the purposes named.

Persons may become colonists by purchasing certificates of membership, which are of four grades, according to the privileges conveyed: $50, $75; $150, $200. A certificate entitles a member to locate certain lots and lands. These are of three denominations: "Business lots," 25 feet by 190 feet, ranging in prices from $100 to $250; "Residence lots," 50 feet by 190 feet, and 100 feet by 190 feet, ranging in prices from $50 to $150; "Outlying Tracts," of the following sizes and prices: One-acre tracts, $150; five-acre tracts, $450; ten-acre tracts, $30 to $50 an acre; twenty-acre tracts, $20 to $40 an acre; forty-acre tracts, $15 to $20. A $50 certificate entitles its holder to locate a $50 residence lot; a $75 certificate, any residence or irrespective of price; a $150 certificate, to locate a business and residence lot, or a business lot and outlying tract, or a residence lot and outlying tract, provided the total value of the lands located does not exceed $300; a $200 certificate, to locate similar lots as the previous, but irrespective of price. The amount paid for the certificate is credited for the lots located, and the balance if the value of the lots exceeds that of the certificate can be paid any time within twelve months of the location of the first location, if more than one is made upon the same certificate. Members may take out as many certificates as they please, but are bound to make one improvement that is to put up a house, or make some equivalent expenditure for each certificate, within four months of making the first location upon it. Upon this being done, and payment of the lots completed, deeds are given conveying a fee simple with one condition, however—that no intoxicating liquors shall ever be sold on such lots in any premises having the character of a place of public resort; breach of this condition involves forfeiture of the property.

The lands about the Town, of which the Colony possesses about 10,000 acres, are excellently adapted for cultivation. A great portion is almost as flat as a table, with an exceedingly slight slope, so that it can be irrigated with the utmost facility. Irrigating canals have been constructed, and large reservoirs for the purpose of storing water as an insurance against exceptionally dry seasons. The fertility of the soil are exceedingly suited for the cultivation of small fruits, and for these a ready market will be found, in addition to the supply required by the Town, and by the mines not far away, a company has been formed for the purpose of establishing a Canning Factory in the Town so soon as the quantity of fruit grown shall exceed the home consumption.

The progress made by the Town has been astonishingly rapid. Up to date—that is, little more than eighteen months from the commencement of the enterprise—there have been 455 certificates of membership taken out, on most of which two locations have been made. The population, according to the nearest estimate we can form, is between fifteen and eighteen hundred. The various institutions necessary to a well-organized community, have been quickly got into working order. There are two churches built, one in course of erection, and another very shortly to be commenced, two medical schools, a museum, a newspaper, a post-office, a telegraph office, a bank three or four large hotels, numerous board-ing houses, stores of all kinds, wholesale—where the business is—and retail, necessaries of life and luxuries—livery stables, etc. The Town has been organized with trustees and other officers, and several companies have been formed for the prosecution of important commercial undertakings, including a steam saw-mill (in active operation), brick manufactory, fruit-canning, etc. In short, the Town has been well laid for growing progress and prosperity.

To sum, therefore, as an eligible new home, Colorado Springs is not surpassed by any place in the Union.
